Lone Graves & Death Register Extracts Mackay District 1864-1965

Several years ago Sue Hill, who is now deceased, spent many days at the Mackay Court House transcribing the local Death Registers. Around the same time another member, Wendy Porter, copied the burial entries that pertain to the Mackay District from the records held at the Bowen Court House.

The results of their diligent work are on file at our society library. However, these have been used infrequently over the years, and almost forgotten. Lately Yvonne Peberdy has spent a lot of time collating and indexing this very interesting and important material.

Each name is now included in an alphabetical index which refers the researcher to the actual records that Sue and Wendy compiled. There is also an index of each place where people are buried. There are names; and burial places, many of the latter are lone graves. This recently indexed material consists of deaths:-

- before the commencement of the Burial Register for the Mackay Cemetery on 3 August 1873; which is from 2 February 1872 to 18 May 1873
- from 16 December 1878 to 18 April 1879; and 8 August 1883 to 15 September 1883 where the pages are missing from the Council Burial Registers.
- of all lone burials up to 1965
- burials in smaller cemeteries managed by trusts where the records are missing.
- registered in Mackay but the person has been buried elsewhere; or not buried anywhere because the body has not been found.

Please note that those who are buried in Mirani, Walkerston, Sarina, Mt. Bassett, and Mackay Cemeteries after 1872 are not included. But it does cover the many small cemeteries around the district most of which have been forgotten, plus the lone graves. Also, from 1926 onwards the deaths in the Mackay Registers cover the area from just south of St. Lawrence, west to Middlemount and just north of Bloomsbury.

This long-forgotten material is well worth inspecting because it provides extra information from that which appears on the microfiche of Queensland Deaths which is published by the Registrar of Births Deaths & Marriages.

The Process of Restriction On Access To Public Records.

[This article is based on a letter that was written by a Member of Parliament some time ago._Ed.]

Some public authorities in late 1999 and early 2000 reviewed their access conditions imposed on certain series of records at Queensland State Archives. This review resulted in access being restricted to some public records, which had previously been available.

Those changes were reported in the Courier Mail on 18 April 2000. There may have been more recent changes since then. However, this information is still relevant as it explains how the process works,

The Queensland Police Service amended the restricted access period to Murder Files from 65 years to Restricted, the Health Department amended the restricted access period to Dunwich Benevolent Society and Eventide records from 30 years to Restricted, and the Education Department amended the restricted access period to School Admission registers from Open to 15 years restricted.

The decision to change access periods was made by the responsible public authority under provisions of the Libraries and Archives Regulations 1990, sections 21, 22, and 23. A Chief Officer may impose conditions and restrictions on access to records held at Queensland State Archives.

Queensland State Archives acts upon access instructions received from the responsible public authority, which transfers records to archives, or the public authority which has assumed responsibility for the records, but does not make the access decision.

The records will be kept available. However, in cases where the restricted access periods have been extended, or now apply indefinitely, researchers will apply to the responsible public authority for access. Once permission to access the restricted records is given, staff at Queensland State Archives may release them to the researcher.

Dunwich Benevolent Asylum records

Judy Webster, Tips for Queensland Research;
December 2005 edition; pp.20-21.

Dunwich Benevolent Asylum was established on North Stradbroke Island in 1865. The function of Dunwich (as defined by the Benevolent Asylum Wards Act of 1861) was to provide for poor people who, because of age, accident, infirmity or otherwise, were unable to care for themselves. Consequently its inmates included both elderly and younger folk. Dunwich was a benevolent asylum, not a mental asylum, but many people spent time in both types of institution.

Some Dunwich records at Qld State Archives are open to the public, but others are under the control of Qld Health who impose a 100-year closure period. For records that are closed you can apply for access through Freedom of Information. However such applications are expensive and often frustrating, so inspect all relevant items listed below (Qld State Archives location numbers are in square brackets) before writing to the Freedom of Information Officer, Legal and Administrative Law Unit, GPO Box 48, Brisbane Qld 4001.

Many Dunwich inmates were illiterate, and there is tremendous variation in spelling even within an individual's own file, so check under all possible variants.

1. In the Public Search Room at Qld State Archives, search the card index to Dunwich records. It covers many nineteenth and twentieth century sources. Note all details on the card, including the date and source reference, and ask the archivist whether that source is accessible.
2. Index to Colonial/Home Secretary's Office applications for admission to Dunwich Benevolent Asylum with associated correspondence, 27 Jan 1890 – 20 Jul 1922. This series has no files for surnames starting with A, B before BOU, E, K, L, O, P, Q, T, U, V or W. Some files for other letters of the alphabet are also missing. The index is a bound volume in the Public Search Room. Even if the bundle as a whole is closed, you can ask the archivist to show you the file for someone admitted more than 100 years ago. Files in each bundle are usually arranged by surname. Their contents vary, but often include:
 - application form with date, place, name, address, age, country of birth, religion, occupation, length of time in Qld, married or single; names, addresses and circumstances of applicant's sons and daughters; names, addresses and circumstances of other relatives; names and addresses of employers during the past 2 years, and length of time with each; real or personal property; aid received from hospitals or other charitable institutions during the past 2 years; reasons for desiring admission; through whom applying; and applicant's signature.

- certificate of two householders (with their name, address and signature) saying how long they had known the applicant
- certificate of a surgeon or physician re applicant's health
- sometimes letters written by the applicant or his/her relatives, or other correspondence.

3. Immigration Department: register of applications for admission to Dunwich 1902-1904 [IMM/108]. The main card index apparently does not include this source. It is alphabetical by first letter of surname, and gives name, age, country of birth, religion, occupation, dates of application, admission, discharge or death, and remarks.

4. Dunwich admission book (males) 1900-1903 [A/52868] was opened to the public in 2004. It usually gives name, age, admission date, date of discharge or death, admitted from where, reason for admission, birthplace, religion, occupation, education, father's name and occupation, mother's maiden name, marital status, when/where married, spouse's name, children, and history. In some cases it gives children's names, ages, places of residence and occupations. "History" may include the inmate's places of residence, occupations and employers, how long in Qld, etc.
5. Index to Dunwich weekly returns from Qld Government Gazette notices, 1885-1907 (admissions, discharges, re-admissions, transfers, removals, deaths). This is in two maroon-covered volumes in the Public Search Room. The Gazettes themselves (on microfilm) often list occupations and places of residence for several years prior to admission, and may give personal and biographical details, ship of arrival, etc. They are especially useful for admissions less than 100 years ago because in such cases the admission records created by Dunwich are closed.

6. Index to Eventide (Sanagate, Qld) Registers of Deaths 1954-1959 (Judy Webster, Brisbane, 2000). When Dunwich closed in 1946, inmates were transferred to Eventide. The index to Eventide death registers gives name, maiden surname for women, year of death, and source location. You need this information to apply Freedom of Information access to the records, which show name, signature, date admitted, from where, cause of admission, age or birth date), birthplace, religion, marital status (or “apart”), occupation, pension, father’s name and occupation, mother’s maiden name, husband’s name or wife’s maiden name, where married, at what age, children (often name, age, exact address), other relatives (siblings, grandchildren, cousins etc., often with exact address), person to be contacted in emergency, height, weight, eye colour, hair colour, history, clinical record and conduct, leave of absence, transfers, discharges.
7. A few Dunwich inmates are included in my index to selected names from 1860s/1870s Colonial Secretary’s Office in-letters on www.judywebster.gil.com.au/colsec.html. Inwards correspondence registers of the Colonial Secretary / Home Secretary would also give minimal details of some applications or correspondence re those (and other) Dunwich inmates.
8. Some inmates were transferred to Dunwich from a mental asylum (or vice versa), so check indexes to Public Curator insanity files - see www.judywebster.gil.com.au/insanity.html.
9. I can arrange for searches (fees apply) in another index to some Dunwich records up to the early 1940s. This index, compiled prior to closure of the records, includes a few personal details.

10. Other sources that may refer to Dunwich admissions are police watchhouse charge books and old age pension records. [These are explained in Judy Webster's book.]

Brisbane: Moreton Bay Matters (Brisbane History Group, PO Box 12, Kelvin Grove DC, Qld 4059) has an article about Dunwich Benevolent Asylum. See also the books Moreton Bay People (volumes 1-3) by Peter Ludlow. Other titles may be listed in Index to Journal Articles on Australian History (Crittenden) and Guide to the History of Queensland (Johnston and Zerner).

Avoid the Pitfalls of the IGI

-Roy Stockdill, Practical Family History, March 2008 pp.32-36

Perhaps one of the things that flummoxes beginners to family history more than anything else is the International Genealogical Index — or the IGI. Roy Stockdill provides some useful tips on getting the most out of this excellent resource for finding baptism and marriage records.

There is no doubt the IGI is a fantastic resource for online genealogy. However - and this is the bit that newcomers often don't realise it is also quirky, full of pitfalls, duplications and errors and can sometimes be downright misleading! My aim is to help you understand how the IGI works, explain some basic principles of how to get the best out of it and assist you to separate the wheat from the chaff.

I should make it clear that this article is about the online version of the IGI only, which is to be found at www.familysearch.org, the website of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS).

Older and more experienced family historians will have grown up with the earlier versions on microfiche and CD-ROM. However, these are now relatively out of date and I suspect the great majority of users today will be accessing the IGI at the FamilySearch website.

A secondary source

There is one golden rule to bear in mind: whilst the IGI is a valuable resource, it is a secondary source and not a primary one. It is, as its name implies, an index to the original records and not those records themselves. It should, therefore, be used strictly as a guide to where to locate the originals.

What is the IGI?

To understand the IGI and how it works, you must first understand what it is and what it is not! The IGI did not start out as a resource for genealogists; it has become one by the goodwill of the LDS in making it available to all, whether church members or not.

Its principal purpose has always been to act as a record of certain ceremonies, called ordinances, which have taken place within the church. These need not concern us here, except to know that they are to do with the LDS beliefs of baptising their ancestors by proxy into their church.

To this end, they have collected many millions of entries from parish registers and bishops' transcripts (BTs - copies of the registers sent annually by the incumbent to the bishop) and also from their own church members. So the IGI falls into two distinct parts: (a) What is called the controlled extraction program from parish registers and BTs; (b) Private submissions from individual church members.

The vital thing to remember when using the IGI is that entries from the controlled extraction program can generally be regarded as accurate, since they come from official records, whilst the private submissions from LDS members should be treated with caution.

I have sometimes been accused of being unfair to LDS members in my criticism of private submissions – and, indeed, I accept many church members are diligent researchers and genealogists who do their best to get their facts right. However, there is no doubt that many private submissions are wildly inaccurate.

Unknown sources

The problem is that there is no way of telling them from the online data what the original underlying source of the information was. It may have come from a parish register or other official record the submitter has examined, but, equally, it may derive from a family bible or similar memorabilia, be an assumption based on a coincidence of names and dates, or simply nothing more than pure guesswork.

It is absolutely vital, then, when using the IGI, to know whether the data comes from an extracted entry from parish registers or BTs, or from a private submission by an LDS member. But how do you tell the difference?

Batch numbers

The answer lies in knowing about batch numbers. These are the essential clue to understanding the IGI. The step by step guide below takes you through the process, using data from my own researches and looking for my great-grandfather, Robert Stockdill, who was born at Easingwold in the North Riding of Yorkshire in 1806.

How To Use the IGI Step by Step

1. First, we go to www.familysearch.org, then to “Search” and select “International Genealogical Index” for the IGI custom search dialogue box. I enter “Robert Stockdill” in the first and last name fields, the event as birth/ christening, the year as 1805 with a range of +/- 5 years, the region as British Isles, the country as England and the county as Yorkshire.

2. Clicking on “Search” produces 10 entries, but I know from my other researches that the ones I want are numbers 8 and 9. These are, in respective order, for Robt Stockdill, a male christening on 24 July 1806 at Easingwold, and Robert Stockdill, a male birth on 22 July 1806, also at Easingwold.
3. Clicking on the underlined link to either entry takes me to another screen that reveals further information. This tells me Robert’s father was also Robert Stockdill and his mother was called Mary Yellow.
4. In a column below the parents’ names is a heading, “SourceInformation: Batch No.” and below that is the batch number itself, P007531. To the immediate right is a column with the dates 1599-1812, which indicates the range of records from which the entries come.
5. I click on the underlined “Batch No.” link which automatically returns me to the IGI search dialogue box with the batch number now placed in the appropriate field.
6. I enter Robert Stockdill and Mary Yellow in the parents’ fields (the other fields can be left blank, except the Region field which must include the British Isles) and click “Search” once more. This produces six children christened by the same couple in Easingwold between 1791 and 1806. Note that the first three were baptised as STOCKDALE and the last three as STOCKDILL – one of the vagaries of spelling in family history we have to get used to!
7. Click on any one of these entries and I am taken to the screen described earlier with the parents’ names. Now I move to the right and click on the link “Source Call No.: 0844556” This takes me to yet another screen, which reveals that the source of the records is the parish registers of All Saints, Easingwold, from 1599-1812.

8. Further links headed "Printout Call No.", take me to another screen which give me details of the microfiche or microfilm from which the records have been extracted and which I can either order from the LDS in Salt Lake City, to be viewed at a Family History Centre (a list of centres can be found on the website), or examined at record offices and libraries where the original registers, of copies are held.

Checking the source

Having followed the step by step, let us return to the list of entries for Robert Stockdill which appeared with my original IGI query on the FamilySearch website. Among them is an entry for Robert Stockdale, number 10 on the list, born at Easingwold on 22 July 1806.

This is clearly my Robert, my great-grandfather, but where did this entry come from? Clicking on the underlined link produces the information that it has been entered in Film Number 170406 and, proceeding further by clicking on subsequent links, it appears that he features in a record entitled "Baptisms for the dead, 1888-1894; their indexes 1888-1955, Manti Temple", which is a document within the LDS Church.

Frankly, I have little idea what this means and I don't much care, since I have the authentic data from the parish registers. However, it illustrates my point that you have to be disciplined when searching the IGI.

It would seem that someone has submitted my great-grandfather's name to the church records but I have absolutely no idea who or why. Nor is there any clue as to where they obtained the information, but on this occasion they seem to have got it right. However, this is not always the case, since many private LDS submissions to the IGI are pure fiction!

Understanding the codes

A more detailed description of batch numbers would seem appropriate here.

Those codes beginning with C, K or J are taken from a christening/baptismal register; those headed M or E are from a marriage register; and those headed P are from a printed copy or typed manuscript of a register. Note that P does not mean “private”, as some beginners often assume. All numerical codes and those beginning with A or F are LDS member submissions and should, therefore, be treated with caution.

Experiment with numbers

You should try experimenting with batch numbers. For instance, changing the last digit may bring up a different set of records from an earlier or later register. And changing the initial C (for christenings) to an M may well produce a marriage register.

The use of batch numbers is very important, since this enables you to refine your search to one particular parish and set of registers.

Find a batch number

How can you discover the batch numbers for a particular parish? Go to the link called “Family History Library Catalogue” on the bar above the IGI search box and when the menu appears click on “Place Search”. You are presented with more links that, with a couple more clicks, take you to a link called “Church Records — Indexes” for your chosen parish.

Select this and then choose “Computer printout” for the church you want and this takes you to yet another screen that should supply the batch numbers for that parish.

An alternative is to use an excellent website devised by a genealogist called Hugh Wallis at <http://freepages.genealogy.rootsweb.com/~hughwallis/IGIBatchNumbers.htm>. This is a compilation of IGI batch numbers for the British Isles and North America and, by using the alphabetical menus to select your parish and batch number and then entering a surname, you are taken straight to the results page at FamilySearch. Brilliant!

Birth date warning

When looking at private submissions to the IGI, as opposed to the controlled extractions, my further advice is to treat like the plague those birth/baptism entries which use the word “About”, since these are dangerously misleading. They are notoriously unreliable, being no more than guesses arrived at by subtracting 25 years in the case of a man and 21 years for a woman from a marriage date to arrive at a supposed birth date.

I have seen examples where the actual birth date has been out by 30, 40 or even 50 years, when a man or woman has married late in life as a widower or widow or as an elderly bachelor or spinster.

What these “about” entries usually mean is the the submitter has a) looked for a birth in a particular parish and failed to find it; or b) assumed a birth in the same parish in which someone married without bothering to check the original records. In fact, the subject may well have been born elsewhere.

Surname searches

Another vagary of the IGI is that what is known as the “standardised surname” search does not always work as you might expect. Theoretically, unless you tick the “Use exact spelling” box the search should find all known variants of the surname on which you are searching.

For instance, if I enter “Stockdale” the search will also find other versions of the name such as Stockdill – my own surname – Stockdall, Stockdell, Stockdaile, and so on.

However, there is a variant of my name with a “g” in the middle, ie. Stogdale, Stogdill. The IGI search does not recognise these names as variants of Stockdale, so when I am researching for my one-name study I have to enter them separately.

Coverage

Do remember that the IGI is far from complete and is being added to continually. The county coverage of the UK, for instance, is eccentric. Some counties are exceedingly well covered and others very poorly.

Final tips

Finally, here are a couple more tips to enable you to search the IGI more scientifically:

- If you are looking for all children born to a particular couple, you can sometimes find them by filling in all the fields except the first and last names. Leave those blank. This is particularly useful if a couple had children in more than one parish. Inevitably, however, it works far better with uncommon surnames and is not recommended for Smiths, Browns and Joneses!
- Enter solely a batch number and region, e.g. British Isles, leave ALL the other fields blank and click on “Search”. You will then get the entire register and can scroll through it in screens of 200 entries at a time up to a maximum of 5,000 entries. Using this method, I have sometimes found entries that did not appear with a normal search because they were lurking in peculiar misspellings of the name. This works best in smaller parishes and not so much in large parishes in towns and cities because you hit the 5,000 maximum.

I have saved until last the two most important pieces of advice of all, which are these...

- Never, ever try to build a family tree solely from the IGI, and especially not from the private submissions! For one thing, it contains very few deaths and there is always the serious possibility that the person you think was an ancestor may, in fact, have died in infancy or as a child. I have also heard cases of researchers finding entries for people who never existed!

- Finally, I cannot emphasise enough that the IGI is an index only. You should always check whatever you find in it with the original records, for two reasons:
 1. To confirm the accuracy of the entries;
 2. Because parish registers very often contain extra information that has not been extracted to the IGI.

For example, in the case of my own family at Easingwold this was one of the many Yorkshire parishes that had what are called Dade Registers. These give much more information than normal, including the names of the grandfathers of baptised children and their parishes of origin — which, of course, has not been extracted to the IGI.

Happy hunting.

About the author

Roy Stockdill is a former Fleet Street journalist and has been a family historian for 30 years. He is on the Society of Genealogists' Board of Trustees and is editor of the award-winning Journal of One-Name Studies for the Guild of One-Name Studies. MY FATHER-IN-LAW: A Bigamist, or was he?

[This interesting query has apparently been published in more than one family history journal, the names of which are unknown. It is from one from one Bev Durkin. _Ed.]

“My curiosity was aroused by a phone call from England to my late mother-in-law, from a woman claiming to be her late husband’s granddaughter.

“My mother-in-law passed the call off as a mistake, but I was not so sure. My father-in-law 26 years older than his wife and they did not marry until he was 48, so I thought it quite possible he had left an illegitimate child behind in England.

“The truth when uncovered was quite different. He had come to Australia to “make his fortune in the mines”, leaving a wife and four children behind in Lancashire. Shortly after his arrival a letter came from his wife to tell him that their three eldest children aged seven, five and two had died from scarlet fever, leaving the youngest, a son aged six months, the only survivor. Years of trying to persuade his wife and son to join him failed and letters between them ceased. It was after this that my in-laws met and married. I couldn’t understand why he had stated on their marriage papers that he was a bachelor, but I have since read that couples separated by sea for seven years were free to marry again. (I have not verified this).

“[An Editor replied to set Bev’s mind at rest:]

“This seven years separation “rule” was accepted and prevalent in the 1800s, but I don’t know when or if it ceased.”

*Here lies the grief of a fond mother
And the blasted expectations of an indulgent father.*

Early Postal Services: Mackay North Coast

About May 1863 John Arthur Macartney, a well known Queensland pioneer cattleman selected a vast tract of land which stretched from Balnagowan near Conningsby (in the south) to the Andromache River (which runs into the O'Connell River) about 70 kilometres to the north. This land was bounded on the east by the ocean and extended west to the foothills of the Clarke Range. Within a year it was divided into four runs; the first two are Jolimont and St.Helens, with runs 3 & 4 combining into Bloomsbury.

The development of the postal services of this area provide some clues about the pattern of its settlement which took place over the following years. The author, Joan Frew, has used Government Department records which appear in the Bibliography of her book; for instance: Queensland State Archives, John Oxley Library in Brisbane, Commonwealth Archives in Brisbane, Mitchell Library in Sydney, Lands Department in Brisbane, and Australia Post in Sydney and Brisbane. However, she acknowledges that the published information is not complete, mainly due to the destruction of Post office records even as late as the 1950's!
